Course description:
“Medi-terra” is the sea “in the middle of earth”. The Mediterranean Sea carried people and their cultures across its vast expanse since prehistory. We will examine how the contemporary Mediterranean world had been shaped through the exchanges of people, goods, and ideas travelling across the Mediterranean Sea. Kinship, social structure, gender, religion and ritual are some of the themes traditionally studied in anthropology. They will help us to analyze cultural, social, political, and economic processes in the Mediterranean area today.

This class is accessible to all majors!

The readings for this class cover a broad range of topics. Some are classics, while others are case studies in cultural anthropology with the qualitative or quantitative approaches. We can say that globalization really began in the Mediterranean, once the ‘core’ of the World System. The Mediterranean Sea provided the necessary communication routes between the “core” and “periphery” that maintained interdependency through the exchange of capital and labor. It was the area where the modern system of banking and credit originated and where the financial, political, military, and cultural “expansion” of the European world began through voyaging. We will “set sails” for the 14th-18th C Venice to look at its success based not on natural resources, but on its ships that controlled the Adriatic and the Mediterranean trade leading to centuries of financial success, military, and political power. We will cross the Adriatic to follow the Venetian merchant fleet port hopping along the Dalmatian coast on its way to the Levantine markets. We will examine a regional model of core and periphery through an application of network analysis to explain the rise of social stratification in Dalmatian cities through travel and commerce.

Travelling along the Aegean shores we will visit the city of Thebes and look for ancient kinship patterns in the Greek tragedy of Antigone. We will travel to St. Foy, a small French town, to the island of Sardinia, and to the Greek village of Spartokhori to look for the modern Mediterranean patterns of kinship, all deeply affected by and transformed through the economic changes through the shifting position of the Mediterranean within the World System. Next, we will explore gender relationships while visiting with Muslim women in Tunis, on the southern shores of the Mediterranean Sea, and discover their powerful networks situated within the family and friends dynamics. We will next explore Muslim lives and religiosity in France in contrast to the French basic value of secularism.

We will travel to Sicily, a large island off the southern Italian coast. It has a long history of economic and political dependency giving rise to the Mafia in the 19th Century. A brilliant analysis by two American anthropologists shows how the powerful Cosa Nostra and the struggle against its octopus-like influences shaped the contemporary political and cultural life not only Sicily, but also Italy as a nation-state.
Defined in anthropology as patterned repetitive actions, rituals are among the most important symbolic means of human expression. The “most dangerous horse race in the world”, held annually in the Tuscan city of Siena shows competitive and collaborative relationships that have been crosscutting the city since the medieval times. Patum, an effervescent public ritual in a Catalan town, serves as a spectacular metaphor with many layers of meaning: from the suppressed Catalan ethnic identity under Franco’s fascist rule, to the passage of Catalonia to regional autonomy in post-Franco’s Spain, the incorporation into the European Union, and her most recent struggle for independence from Spain. We will approach these topics from two perspectives: looking at the lives of Mediterranean people relating their experiences to our own, and finding their place within the larger framework of human behavior.

LEARNING OUTCOMES

1) Anthropological perspective:
Students will learn about the theoretical and methodological approach in anthropology. We will discuss particular topics, listed above, in the context of Mediterranean cultures as well as in the context of the larger theoretical framework of human behavior.

2) Applying knowledge to Contemporary Global Context:
The Mediterranean is currently at the center of attention due to the large economic migration and refugee population moving across its shores. Through the unique anthropological approach students will be able to understand the contemporary global trends.

3) Intercultural Knowledge:
Students will explore the Mediterranean way of life as a response to environmental, historical, and social circumstances different from their own providing a strong basis for intercultural understanding and cooperation.

4) Knowledge of Cultural Worldview Framework:
Students will explore the systemic nature of interdependency between individual and state both from historical and modern perspectives that form the basis of the Mediterranean cultural worldview. Through developing the proposal for a fieldwork project students will be able to take the point of view of an individual within this framework.

5) Understanding Global Systems:
Students will learn about analytical models such as the World System, network analysis, and graph theory that are particularly useful in studying communication structures underlying the dynamics of global systems.

6) Research and academic writing: Through the process of writing the term paper students will learn how anthropologists fund and conduct research. The term paper is a collaborative project inducing cooperation, one of the hallmarks of our species.
TEACHING PHILOSOPHY

Anthropology recognizes teaching and learning as one of the fundamental traits of our species. It is a process of exchanging and engaging thoughts enriching both students and teachers. It is giving and receiving knowledge and support. I adhere to the Socratic method whenever possible: asking questions and inviting students to develop a dialogue. This class includes lectures and films and strongly encourages student participation and discussions. Everybody is entitled to have a voice and opinion, regardless whether we agree or disagree, and intolerance is not a part of a good class climate.

How to get a good grade in this class:

Please, read this syllabus carefully! Attend class! Read the assigned chapters ahead of class! Download presentations from Canvas ahead of class. Take additional notes in class! Plan your term paper well in advance! Use the class material in your paper! (The detailed guidelines are provided in the assignment). Ask questions and participate in discussions! Please, talk to me if you have any problems. You can earn extra credit points built in the quizzes as well as by showing interest and class participation.

Student responsibility:

It is students’ responsibility to ask about notes, exams and other information about missed classes! Students are strongly encouraged to communicate with the professor and pick up their exams.

ATTENDANCE is expected.

EXAMS AND GRADES

- Two take-home midterm exams and the Final quiz in class, according to the U of U Final Exam Schedule.
- Format: midterm Essay questions
- Final exam: multiple choice, true/false, fill-in, 3 short essays.
- Detailed study guides will be posted on our CANVAS.
- Extra credit: each exam will contain an additional essay for up to 7 extra points.
• Research Paper 100 points, Research Presentation 20 points, Research project outline 20 points

Presentation: Students need to sign up for teams of 3-5 members for research projects by the end of the third week of the semester. Each team will present about 10 powerpoint slides in class for about 15 minutes on their research progress. The project is structured as a research proposal and the class will be the panel that allocates the fieldwork grants based on the quality of the proposals. (It is an exercise and the money is virtual.) All team members earn the same grade. The purpose of this project is to understand the anthropological research methods and to promote students’ cooperation. The presentation is the basis for the Outline and the Term paper. Each team turns in ONE presentation.

Presentation schedule: Students will have randomly assigned presentation dates published on Canvas. If we cannot accommodate all presentations, the power points will be posted on Canvas.

Term paper outline 20 points: title, headings for each section, and at least two bibliographical scholarly references

Research project paper is based on the presentation and the Outline. 100 points: 5 pages of text. The Budget, and Bibliography are additional pages, all double space, Times 12, word format. The paper is a research proposal for a project based on student’s interests. The choice of possible topics will be offered in the detailed Paper Guidelines. The paper is graded on:

1. Content: well-formulated argument, good examples, application of knowledge gained in this class 60 points.
2. Style: organization, spelling, concise writing, proper use of references 40 points

Plagiarism Software Policy:
Your professor may elect to use a plagiarism detection service in this course, in which case you will be required to submit your paper to such a service as part of your assignment.

Plagiarism will result in failing the class. Papers obtained on the Internet and references to non-scholarly sources from the Internet and papers written for another class are not acceptable.

Late exams/paper/presentation:
If assignments are late, 4 points will be subtracted for each day, including weekends. Deadlines can be changed and make-up exams are allowed under special circumstances or granted with a doctor’s note.
