

Government Secrecy and the Intelligence Studies POLS3960-004

Course Description

This course will be taught by a graduate student (a recipient of University of Utah's Teaching Assistantship Award). This course offers students a critical understanding of government secrecy and intelligence studies by familiarizing students with the fundamental intelligence ideas, issues, and challenges through readings, in-class exercises, and career planning. Students will develop skills to professionally read, write, and speak, explaining applications of intelligence strategies and operations to business, law enforcement, homeland security, national security and regional issues.
